

Foreword

THERE can be no complete rationalization for the waging of war; yet, from all great conflicts there inevitably arise things which are good and new. A different idea appears; an infant science, or an individual versed in a new skill comes forth. One of these latter is the Air Navigator. His elements are high speed, great distances, and minute units of time. His enthusiasms are for a clear night of stars, a set of finely calibrated instruments, a smooth riding, fast flying aircraft. It is for a group of such men that this book has been published: the Air Navigators, Class 42-14, of the Army Air Force Navigation School, Hondo, Texas.

To Captain Jack Sward...

Class 42-14 promises to fulfill your one wish. We'll "Bring home the bacon," sir!

And to the other fine men who left us while performing their duties at Hondo:

You are carrying on with us until the last mission is flown.
