

July 4,
England:

Dearest June:

Another July 4th. Who would have imagined even in the wildest dream ten years ago, that I would celebrate the 4th in England in 1944. Just goes to show how little we know about the future. I don't believe your favorite Zoodoo fortune teller could have told me that even three years ago. Well, anyway here I am anyway and doing very little celebrating.

I was in London again a few days ago and had quite a wild time to my dear. Yes, I must confess I let my hair down again. I was with Mac & King (Bombardier & Co. Pilot). I did manage to take time to see two shows: "Up In Arms" and "Two Girls and A Sailor". Both were good shows and I enjoyed them very much. I saw them both the same day.

I'm sorry but I still haven't sent the pictures I promised. The fact is it is just one. I believe it is the one Mom says was in the Press. It isn't very good but I'll send it anyway when I get an envelope large enough. I might even enclose it in this letter.

Mac and Chuck are going home tomorrow.
They are both so happy and I'm happy for them
Look out New York if and when those boys
land there together.

You asked in your letter that I received last nite if I could give you some idea about when I might see you again. I'm sorry I can't because I don't know myself but remember I said once before maybe (only maybe)
I see you in the fall.

You know you might not even know Lew. I'll assure you kiddo he isn't the same Billy that you knew at home. I've been told by quite a few how much I had changed even Shirley says that I'm a different guy. I hope most of the changes are for the best.

I guess I'll look for an envelope now to send the picture in. So long for now give my best to your folks.

always.
