Hello Darling:

How is my lil' sweet tonight. I guess you worked today, eh? Natch. Well I didn't. I got off the train about 0730 this morning and although I had intended to stay in town for awhile and latch on to some positive Mexican food, the weather changed my mind and I caught a truck for the base. It has been cold and wet all day and I don't feel to swell this evening.

I found Kaiser when I arrived; he is in the barracks just behind me. His wife came in and the deal for the car fell thru. He lives in town, however. Eddie lives about a block away and we spent most of our waking hours together today (slept from 22:00-05:00) He has just finished his psycho tests and only the physical remains between him and classification.

ARMY AIR FORCES

Went to the show tonight and saw a stinker and now I'm ready to sleep again.

I don't think this place will be too bad and if all goes well with the tests that all I can ask for. I've just got to make pilot this time. Three years is a long time to wait for a thing ya know.

Well, anyway I can try my damndest. One really needs an automobile in this place though the gasoline situation is bad. They allow you but fifteen trips per month and if you subtract from that the gas you would use driving around town, well you could probably get home about once or twice a week. Unless you could find a car pool. Anyway I will work on it now and then when I have the time and maybe I can figure a way to be married and not have things too hard for you.

I hope the sun will shine tomorrow. Maybe I can start on my tax during these few days when there isn't too much to do.

Right now I'm so snowy white I could easily get lost in the sheets.

My address now is a brief one: just
